GRASS VALLEY MINES.

The Grass Valley (Cal.) Transcript, of a recent date, makes the following favorable mention of mining prospects in that vicinity:

To look at and ride over, the main streets of Grass Valley, would induce a stranger to answer "Old Block's" question, "Is Grass Valley played out?" in the affirmative; but the reports from the mines in the vicinity would soon destroy the impression and the dilapidated condition of the streets could be accounted for in the lack of enterprise on the part of property-holders. The mines are improving continually. The recent strike in the North Star is most encouraging from the fact that it is the deepest mine in the district, and the croakers had begun to say quartz would not yield at great depths and to point to the North Star as an example. Now that these predictions have failed and the rock has been found, these same class exclaim: "I told you so all the time." We understand that the mining prospect is most encouraging and there are numerous chances in the vicinity for opening up as rich mines as Grass Valley has ever boasted of. All that is required is capital controlled by men who understand the business of mining. We hope soon to hear of new projects backed by capital, and we are confident in such an event new and rich mines will be multiplied in Grass Valley District.

A NOVEL TEAM.—The Omaha Bee tells the following: Last summer "Little Backshot," of Company M, Second Cavalry, while out in the vicinity of the Loop river, caught four young elk two bucks and two does. The animals were brought into the barracks at the time the company returned, and they are now nine or ten months old. Backshot has lately been training them all to drive in harness, having had a harness with a peculiar bit made for them by the saddler at the barracks, and he has also rigged up for them a sleigh. The two bucks are now pretty well trained, and can be driven like a team of horses. Backshot recently drove them to Florence and back, considerably astonishing the natives of that rural place. It is said that he can make much better time than Golden Smith, Maid or Lucy. The two does, too, are fast, reaching a state of training, and Backshot expects soon to drive a four-in-hand team. The happy family are kept in the stables at the barracks, and run around loose a greater part of the time.

A LAW is now in effect in Illinois by which a habitual drunkard is tried by a jury. If guilty a guardian is appointed who takes charge of his property, and he is legally debarred from doing business. A similar law has worked well in France, without any objections; and nearer home it might have a salutary influence.

In Pesth, recently, a youthful prodigy repeated the Lord's prayer in twenty-two languages.
